With his voice trembling with emotion, Henry implored his fellow delegates to stand up for their rights and refuse to tolerate the tyranny of the British government. He reminded them of the sacrifices that their forefathers had made to secure their liberty and warned them that they could not afford to let that liberty be taken away from them.

"Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be Free Downloaded at the price of chains and slavery?" he asked. "Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take; but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!"

Henry's speech was a clarion call to arms that helped to rally support for the American Revolution. It was printed and distributed throughout the colonies, and it inspired countless Americans to take up arms against the British.

Today, "Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death" remains one of the most famous and influential speeches in American history. It is a reminder of the importance of liberty and the price that must sometimes be paid to secure it.
